Quarterly fund commentary

After much showmanship from both sides, on the 14th August, Eurozone finance ministers finally agreed to a three-year EUR86 billion bailout for Greece after Germany backed down on its opposition to what is the third rescue of Greece in five years. The International Monetary Fund continue to make the point that without further debt relief, the new deal will not be sustainable based on Greece's projected economic growth profile. The European Central Bank's (ECB) excess liquidity, through its ongoing targeted longer-term refinancing operations programme, increased a further EUR100 billion in the quarter, taking the total to EUR500 billion and well on its way to reaching at least EUR1 trillion by the end of the programme. GDP growth data in Europe during the quarter rose to 1.5% (year on year) compared to expectations of 1.2%. The news of Volkswagen's emission's controversy led to headlines about the downside risks to German growth but look likely to be overplayed. With the economic growth outlook is still fragile, alongside building concerns about slowing emerging market growth, markets are now expecting the ECB to either increase/extend their asset buying program and/or look to undertake further cuts in the deposit rate. At the end of the quarter forward future markets were pricing close to a 50% chance of a further 10 to 15bps cut in the deposit rate by the first quarter of 2016.
