Quarterly fund commentary

The European Central Bank (ECB) met twice during the quarter, with no announced changes to either the base or deposit rates. It is anticipated that the ECB's first interest rate rise will not be until around mid-2019. During his March conference, the ECB president, Mario Draghi delivered another upbeat assessment of the Eurozone's economic recovery. He revised the forecast for Eurozone 2018 growth up to 2.4%, compared with the 2.3 per cent estimated the previous quarter. The ECB is currently winding down its €2.3tn quantitative easing programme. In January, the amount of asset purchases dropped from €60bn to €30bn. It will continue to buy €30bn bonds a month until September 2018. After that, a three-month taper is expected to draw the €2.3tn QE programme to a close. The ECB's headline inflation target rate of near, but less than 2% continues to be some way off due to subdued price pressures. However, the rise in the euro and rising bond yields, if anything, will dampen price pressures. That being said, the ECB are likely to keep interest rates at record lows of 0% for the base rate and -0.4% for the bank deposit rate until inflation targets are near to being reached. It is forecast that the inflation target will be likely reached in 2019, based on current projections.

Risk Warnings

The value of investments and any income will fluctuate (this may partly be the result of exchange rate fluctuations) and investors may not get back the full amount invested. Debt instruments are exposed to credit risk which is the ability of the borrower to repay the interest and capital on the redemption date. The fund invests in a limited number of holdings and is less diversified, and therefore this may result in large fluctuations of the value of the fund. The effects of inflation may result in a reduction in the value of your investment.
