Quarterly fund commentary

Towards the end of the quarter, one of the year's dominant themes took centre stage: central bank policy. The US Federal Reserve eventually raised short-term interest rates by 0.25%, ending a seven-year period of close to zero interest rates while the European Central Bank unveiled a smaller-than-anticipated stimulus package. The fund seeks a positive return over the medium-term, irrespective of market developments, and seeks to have a pre-defined level of risk through the application of both a Global Market Neutral and Financial Futures strategy. The investments made within these strategies are determined by the outcome of quantitative models for stock selection and tactical asset allocation. During the quarter, the fund's performance was positive. Our Global Market Neutral strategy performed positively as the stock selection model worked well across the globe, mainly supported by our momentum-related factors. Our Financial Futures strategy also delivered positive returns with our long equity positions being the main driver.
