Quarterly fund commentary

Latin American equity markets displayed resilience during the quarter as they recorded a positive, albeit modest, gain for the period. From a country perspective, however, there was significant performance divergence, particularly between Brazil and Mexico. Confidence towards the former was boosted following the election of a new president for the country in the belief that he would introduce market-friendly policies. By contrast, market sentiment towards Mexico's new leader was less favourable given concerns he may adopt a more interventionist approach. However, during bouts of market weakness we have been increasing our exposure to Mexico in our view that too much negative news was being priced into local equity valuations. We continue to believe that Brazil offers one of the best long-term outlooks among emerging markets and we will be inclined to increase our exposure to the country if we see significant progress on economic reforms under the new administration. The fund also invests in Chile, Peru and Colombia, as well as non-index countries such as Panama. From a sector perspective we favour consumer discretionary and materials.
